COUNCIL FOR DIVERSITY AND INNOVATION

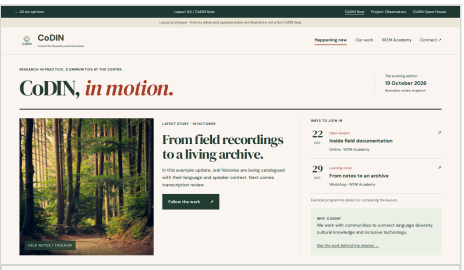

What's happening at CoDIN?

Start with three new layout options that bring current work to the front. The original three visual directions remain below for comparison.

NEW / DIFFERENT STRUCTURES, NOT JUST DIFFERENT STYLES

Three ways to make the work visible.

Each changes the first screen, the way visitors find work, and the arrangement of project and learning pages.

LAYOUT 04 / NEW STRUCTURE

CoDIN Now

A newsroom: dated lead story, opportunity rail and a filterable activity desk.

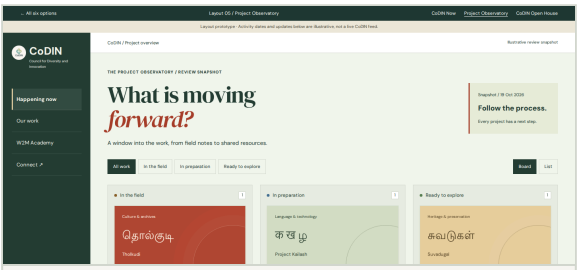

First screen: Current updates and ways to join in, before the first scroll.

LAYOUT 05 / NEW STRUCTURE

Project Observatory

A persistent sidebar, project stage board, list view and project work logs.

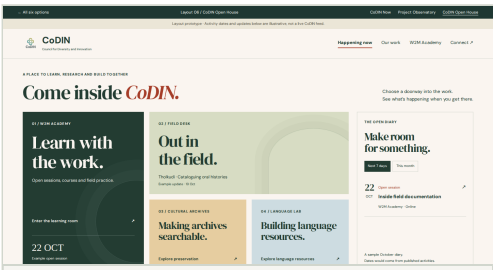

First screen: What is being worked on, its latest movement and its next step.

Learning layout (layouts.html?concept=observatory&page=learn)

LAYOUT 06 / NEW STRUCTURE

CoDIN Open House

An activity hub with room-like tiles, an open diary and participation paths.

First screen: Where to participate and what is happening in each part of CoDIN.

Project layout (layouts.html?concept=house&page=project)

Learning layout (layouts.html?concept=house&page=learn)

Mobile image (review/house-390.png)

Compare the idea, not the palette.

Now: follow the activity. Observatory: follow the work. Open House: find a way to take part.

The new layouts share typography and a restrained palette so their structural differences are easier to judge.

A useful team review

Try the new layouts on desktop and mobile. Use the activity filters, project board and open diary. Then ask:

1. Does this feel like CoDIN and the communities we work with?
2. Can a first-time visitor see what is happening now, what CoDIN does and a useful next step?
3. Does it support researchers, partners and learners equally well?
4. Can the team keep the content current without extra design work?
